Major gifts will involve campus partnership

The Western Kentucky University Board of Regents at its regularly quarterly meeting Oct. 28 endorsed a conceptual plan for a major gift fund raising campaign.

The plan will be a partnership with faculty, staff and administrators and businesses, alumni and the Western Kentucky University Foundation, said Robert M. Rutledge III, vice president for Institutional Advancement.

The campaign will augment an already healthy annual fund-raising campaign by challenging alumni and friends to actively participate in a major fund-raising campaign, Rutledge said.

"This plan will significantly increase private support for the University over the next five to 10 years," he said, adding that as the plan matures, the cost of raising money will decrease.

A more detailed plan will be brought to the regents in January.

Regents also approved the transfer of about $3.9 million in endowment and development assets to the Western Kentucky University Foundation.

Louisville bank to provide WKU Foundation custodial & investment services

Trustees of the Western Kentucky University Foundation at its regularly scheduled Board meeting last month interviewed 12 candidates for custodial and investment management services and selected PNC Bank of Louisville to provide these services for the WKU Foundation.

In other business, the Board received a report by the nominating committee as it moves to establish a profile for potential trustees and finalize the process for trustee appointment.

"We are pleased to provide these services for the benefit of Western Kentucky University," said Steve Catron, chair of the Foundation Board. "Our Board members have spent countless hours to assist the movement of Western as it continues its quest and strives for excellence."

These funds are clearly identified in the annual financial statements and audit report of the College Heights Foundation (CHF) as custodial funds, and the arrangement under the agreement was made to be of service to the University, said Dr. Dero Downing, CHF president.

It was understood from the outset that these funds remain subject to call by the University where they will be administered by the Western Kentucky University Foundation.

Dr. Downing said this action does not adversely affect the College Heights Foundation, nor does it in any way affect the funds which have been entrusted to the CHF by supportive alumni and friends who have shared their resources to benefit and encourage deserving students. He also stressed that the two foundations were separate entities.

"We intend to make absolutely certain that every penny within the College Heights Foundation which has been placed there by supportive friends, and all future gifts, will be protected and administered by the College Heights Foundation in compliance with the donor's expressed wishes at the time the gifts are made," Dr. Downing said.

In other business, the Board:

- Approved allocating $1.6 million from the 1993-94 fund balance. Projects funded include $350,000 for a major gift campaign and marketing plan, $300,000 for instructional equipment, $150,000 for equipment for Facilities Management, $100,000 in matching funds for interactive television and $75,000 to remodel the Journalism Department. The University will still maintain a fund reserve of about $4 million;

- Approved a set of priorities to the building of the 1995-96 budget. They include increasing funding for instruction, research and libraries; enhancing faculty and staff salaries; enhancing student retention; enhancing minority student recruitment; funding for President Thomas C. Meredith's "Moving to a New Level While Keeping Old Traditions" initiative; and campus maintenance and

- Approved creating the positions of staff assistant in the Office of International Programs, trust accountant in Institutional Advancement and fire safety coordinator in Facilities Management.

WKU Public Radio wins 10 AP awards, Bingham award; surpasses $94,000 fund-raising, membership goal

The public radio service of WKU has won 10 awards in its class from the Associated Press of Kentucky at the fall meeting of the Kentucky Broadcasters Association in Lexington.

In addition to the winning contest entries, which ranged from best newscast and best breaking spot news story, WKU's station was recognized with an award for the number of contributions it makes to the Associated Press news desk as well as the KBA's Meritorious Service Award.

The Public Radio Service also recently won the 1994 Barry Bingham Media Award, presented by the Kentucky Psychiatric Association for outstanding reporting on topics related to mental illness.

Reporter Kevin Ingram and News Director Dan Modlin produced the winning series, Silence and Signals. The three-day broadcast addressed a number of concerns relating to youth suicide in Kentucky.

Western's Public Radio Service includes WKYU-FM in Bowling Green, WKPB-FM in Henderson/Owensboro, WDCL-FM in Somerset and WKUE in Elizabethtown.

The station ended its fall membership drive Nov. 5 after raising a total of $94,323 in pledges. The goal for the drive was $94,000.

Education Commissioner Boysen chats on campus about KERA

Kentucky's Education Commissioner, Dr. Thomas Boysen, visited WKU on Oct. 26, and during a breakfast meeting on campus told his audience of WKU students and faculty that the top challenge among American High School Educators today is motivating their students.

Speaking on The KERA Graduate, Boysen told the group motivation is one reason implementation of the Kentucky Education Reform Act is important.

One of the characteristics of The KERA Graduate is to be a more active learner, Boysen said, and it is an important task of the high school and higher education teacher to evoke that kind of participation from students, the Commissioner said.

Boysen outlined a number of early school programs KERA is supporting, programs he called "delight starts."

"Robert Frost said that a good poem begins in delight and ends in wisdom, and that's what a really good education should do too," said Boysen, adding that "We need to be sending the message from the very earliest days that the education you get is the education you create."

He emphasized also that active learning is important.

KERA is also devoted to making students more literate, Boysen said, concentrating writing, reading and on thinking.

He said assessments at the various levels are based a great deal on students' writings to assess basic skills and their abilities to apply those skills, and also on writing portfolios.

"We have the clearest writing standards in the country," Boysen said.

"More active, more literate and more numerate and more collaborative," Boysen said, talking about the importance also of knowledge of basic math skills and how to apply them, also in groups.

"Early indications are that students are doing better in math, better than in the other areas, except perhaps for reading," Boysen said.

Complimenting WKU's technology program in preparing teachers to acquaint their students with use of computers, Boysen said when he speaks to new teachers about KERA he doesn't think they feel the stress that some veteran teachers have about reform.

"Computers are such an interactive medium as opposed to television, which has been a passive medium," Boysen said.

"Higher Education is helping a great deal by acknowledging the testing system for an additional means of placement and scholarships," Boysen said, adding: "That's sending a message to the high schools that this is important." Boysen said within the next six months, there will be "very solid research" reported independently on the technical validity and reliability of testing, and results will be "very high," he predicted.

"I think if students come out of secondary school and hit a very different environment, it won't be good for them and it won't be good for you," Boysen told his WKU audience, adding that the research emphasis in KERA needs "to continue to be placed on the research interests of higher education and focus in the most important places. I suggest in this accountability dialogue that's going on, a place in higher education for more overt student accountability," he said, suggesting a testing take place at the end of the student's second-year, sophomore level.

Student-Alumni Phonathon is success

With more than $257,000 in pledges, the annual Student-Alumni Phonathon at Western Kentucky University has ended another record-breaking fund drive.

Donald Smith, coordinator of the annual fund and the Phonathon, said the fundraiser's goal of $250,000 was exceeded the last night of calling. The final pledge total of $257,200 surpasses last year's record total by more than $30,000.

More than 700 volunteers called about 30,000 WKU alumni over the past several weeks for pledges of financial support for the University's academic programs. More than 7,000 alumni pledged to give to the Phonathon, Smith said, including more than 2,000 new donors.

Chemistry gets fellowship funds

The Thermal Analysis Laboratory in WKU's Department of Chemistry has received funds for two fellowships from one of the country's leading manufacturers of polymers, Huntsman Packaging Corp. Huntsman is providing $6,000 a year to establish the Huntsman Thermal Analysis Fellowships which will provide summer stipends of $3,000 each for two students.

Research activities will focus on the application of thermal analysis for polymers and will be directed by Dr. Charles Lee, a visiting professor in the Chemistry Department. Dr. Lee has 29 years of industrial polymer experience

As an example of prospective research activities, a method of accurately determining the calcium carbonate content in polyethylene film has been developed through the cooperative efforts of the Thermal Analysis Laboratory and Huntsman Packaging Corp. in Bowling Green within the past year.

The Huntsman Group is a Fortune 500 company and is the largest privately held chemical company in the United States. The Bowling Green plant is one of 76 plants worldwide.

The Bowling Green College

By Bob Skipper, Coordinator of News Services

The Bowling Green College of Business Administration at Western is continuing the rich heritage fostered by its predecessor, the Bowling Green Business University. The "BU," well known for the outstanding success of its graduates in the world of business, operated as a private college from 1874 to 1963 when it merged with Western.

The primary mission of the College is to provide programs of study leading to baccalaureate and master's degrees within the College's five departments: accounting, economics, finance and computer information systems, management and marketing.

"Baccalaureate programs build upon a firm liberal arts education with the professional theory and applications necessary for creative and rational decision making in the business world," according to Dr. J. Michael Brown, Dean of the College.

The Baccalaureate Programs

The baccalaureate programs are accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB). One of only 305 such colleges, accreditation further enhances the College's reputation for providing the highest level of quality in its business programs. "This means that the College has satisfied national standards regarding curriculum, faculty qualifications and resources for computer and library facilities," Dr. Brown said.

The Graduate Programs

At the graduate level, the master of arts program in economics emphasizes contemporary economic issues while the master of arts in education program offers either a major or a minor in economics.

The recently established the master of professional accountancy degree supports entry into the accounting field. "The program enables students to satisfy the 150-hour educational requirement to sit for the Certified Public Accountant examination," Dr. Brown said.

The College benefits from the guidance of an advisory council composed of regional and national business leaders. This council helps keep the College in touch with the trends, concerns and needs in the world of business today.

The Faculty

The faculty of the College continue an active role in teaching, service and research. Outstanding teaching awards, service-related activities (including consulting), and research productivity are among the accomplishments of the faculty. Research productivity is notable as numerous faculty present their research findings at various distinguished professional business-related conferences throughout the country.

The College annually recognizes its faculty in the areas of teaching, research and public service. The recipients for the 1993-94 academic year include: Dr. Dawn Bolton, marketing assistant professor, teaching; Dr. Brian Goff, economics associate professor, research, and Dr. Lawrence Finley, management professor, public service.

Students in the College of Business Administration are given many opportunities to enhance their classroom learning with real-world experiences, both on and off campus.

Participation in professional organizations is strongly encouraged. A variety of departmental clubs, professional associations and business fraternities provides the student with an opportunity to refine interpersonal and leadership skills.

Some of the organizations available at Western include: American Marketing Association, Beta Alpha Psi, Beta Gamma Sigma, Data Processing Management Association, Delta Sigma Pi, Financial Management Association, Institute of Management Accountants, Omicron Delta Epsilon, Phi Beta Lambda and Society for Human Resource Management.

Students also can sharpen their skills working off campus, Dr. Brown said.

"Graduate and senior level undergraduate students have an opportunity to work in a consulting capacity with small businesses and government agencies in the south central Kentucky area through the University's Institute for Economic Development and Public Service," he said.

Alumni have been active in supporting the College. Their generosity has led to the establishment of two endowed professorships — the D.D. Lessenberry Professorship and the Meany-Holland Professorship.

The Lessenberry Professorship, currently held by Dr. John Stallard, is named for Barren County, Ky., native David Daniel Lessenberry, a distinguished teacher, author and speaker.

The Meany-Holland Professorship, currently held by Dr. Janet Colbert, is named for James R. Meany and J.C. Holland, Bowling Green Business University graduates and faculty members who were instrumental in the development of the public accounting profession in the Bowling Green area.
